Createspace, United States, 2012. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.This is a story of a tragic and terrifying childhood, as told by a little girl living in a dysfunctional family in the Midwest during the seventies and eighties. You will see it as she did, telling it day by day as best she can. How could one possibly view the world with all the horror she endured? You will see it through Amara's eyes as only she can tell it. You will share in the few triumphs and the many failures in her search for innocence. In her own words, July 23, 1971 was my first beating from my father, Jeb. He beat my mother, Rose. And sent her into preterm labor taking me from the only safe place I will ever know. We understand from the opening words that this will be unforgettably tragic. As the tale unfolds, it becomes apparent that Amara was born into a world that offered little compassion or love, only pain and terrifying defilement at every turn. If ever there was a family that was destined to suffer the torments of hell, this was it. You'll meet her mother who suffered nightly beatings in hope that it would somehow end. You'll see the inhuman sacrifices she made in order to hold onto her daughters and sons. And you see her failures as the torment overcomes her and she moves the family away from the horror only to return to it over and over again. Jeb, born from a generation of abuse could see no beginning nor end to the horror he would bring to those around him. To those on the outside, he was a charmer, a hit...
